Security Horizon Announces Executive Staff Changes

Colorado Springs, CO – February 27, 2007 – Security Horizon, Inc. today announced changes to the executive management team sparked by CEO/CTO Russ Rogers’ decision to pursue different opportunities outside the company. The company has named Principal Security Consultant Brian Kirouac as the new CTO. Brian possesses more than 15 years as an IT professional. Prior to joining Security Horizon, he served in a wide range of information technology positions in both domestic and international environments. In addition to his new position at Security Horizon, Brian serves as an instructor for the National Security Agency (NSA) INFOSEC Assessment (IAM) and INFOSEC Evaluation (IEM) Methodologies and team member of NSA IA-CMM Appraisals. Brian is currently pursuing his second Master’s degree, this one in Computer Science, with an emphasis in Information Systems Security.

“While we are saddened by Russ’ departure from our executive management team, we are happy to retain his services in a consulting capacity as well as provide an opportunity for Brian to fully apply himself in his new executive leadership roll”, stated Greg Miles, President of Security Horizon. “First and foremost, it is Security Horizon’s responsibility to ensure our customers and partners continue to experience excellent support and we believe these changes will ensure consistency and future growth.”
